The Core of the Teachings

In 1980, at the request of his biographer Mary Lutyens, Krishnamurti wrote a short text summarising the core of his teachings: The core of Krishnamurti's teaching is contained in the statement he made in 1929 when he said, 'Truth is a pathless land.' Man cannot come to it through any organisation, through any creed, through any dogma, priest or ritual, nor through any philosophical knowledge or psychological technique. He has to find it through...

The Ending of Conflict

Conflict exists when we disregard what is actually taking place and translate it in terms of an ideal, in terms of 'what should be', in a concept we have accepted, or we ourselves have created. When there is a division between 'what is' and 'what should be' there must inevitably be conflict.

New Book: End of The Journey

This new collection of dialogues explores a central question: Why, after years of listening to Krishnamurti, has there been no radical change? Drawing from small group discussions held in India between 1965 and 1984, these selections reveal not just Krishnamurti's answers to the questions posed by the participants, but the methodology of his dialogue itself.

Krishnamurti Podcast – Anger

This month's podcast has six sections. The first extract (2m 6s) is from Krishnamurti's second talk in Rajghat 1967, titled 'Looking at anger totally'.

The second extract (6m 26s) is from the second discussion in Madras 1971, titled 'Is it possible to be free of irritation?'

The third extract (11m 30s) is from the first talk in New Delhi 1967, titled 'Being attentive to anger'.

The fourth extract (15m 40s) is from the second talk in Madras 1971, titled 'An observation of anger without the observer'.

The fifth extract (33m 20s) is from the second discussion in Saanen 1972, titled 'Anger has no opposite'.

The final extract (45m 10s) this month is from the second question and answer meeting in Ojai 1980, titled 'Don't respond to anger with anger'.

Krishnamurti Postal Lending Library Review

Krishnamurti's Journal

In the December newsletter, it was mentioned that Krishnamurti had written three diary-type books, and the first one, known as Krishnamurti's Notebook was described in some detail. This month the focus is on the second diary, published in 1982 as "Krishnamurti's Journal"

The following is taken from the foreword of the journal, written by Mary Lutyens:

In September 1973 Krishnamurti suddenly started keeping a journal. For nearly six weeks he made daily entries in a notebook. For the first month of that period he was staying at Brockwood Park, Hampshire, and for the rest of the time in Rome. He resumed the journal eighteen months later while in California.

Nearly every entry starts with a description of some natural scene which he knows intimately, yet in only three instances do these descriptions refer to the place in which he was actually staying. Thus, the first page of the first entry describes the Grove in the park at Brockwood, but by the second page he is imagining himself in Switzerland. It is not until he is staying in California in 1975 that he again gives a description of his actual surroundings. For the rest, he is recalling places he has lived in, with a clarity that shows how vivid is his memory for natural scenery, arising from the acuteness of his observation.

This journal also reveals to what extent his teaching is inspired by his closeness to nature.

Throughout, Krishnamurti refers to himself in the third person as "he". Further, he tells us more about himself than is usual in his other books.

Every entry in the Journal reveals in a unique way Krishnamurti's consciousness from day to day

"Any form of conscious meditation is not the real thing; it can never be. Deliberate attempts to meditate is not meditation. It must happen; it cannot be invited. Meditation is not the play of the mind nor of desire and pleasure. All attempt to meditate is the very denial of it. Only be aware of what you are thinking and doing and nothing else. The seeing, the hearing, is the doing, without reward and punishment. The skill in doing lies in the skill of seeing, hearing. Every form of meditation leads inevitably to deception, to illusion, for desire blinds. It was a lovely evening and the soft light of spring covered the earth"
